Dear Dr. Samuel Harrold,

Thank you for purchasing a Video Byte! I'd like to explain our process in more detail.

A scriptwriter and scientific animator will use the information you provide to create a simple but engaging summary, which will be paired with imagery and music, to create a short and dynamic piece that is designed for sharing via websites, blogs and social media. Once we create the first draft of the Video Byte, we will send it to you for feedback and approval. After you approve your Video Byte, we will send a link to you where you can download the video and a YouTube link to share on social media.

A few examples of such a video can be found here.

To begin, we'd appreciate your brief answers to a few questions about the main findings and relevance of your paper. Your answers to these questions are critical to ensure that your Video Byte accurately covers what you feel is most important about your paper.

- What is your intended audience (e.g., an educated general audience, specialists in your field, clinicians)?
- What is the specific problem your work addresses?
- Why should your audience care about this problem?
- What limitations does your work have, and what comes next?
- Could you please provide the name of the journal where your paper will be published, along with the assigned DOI (if available), so we can include them in the video byte?

If you have any high-quality images, you are welcome to share that content with us. Please note that under our Terms of Service, it is your responsibility to determine if it is necessary to obtain any licenses required to use third-party content.

We know that getting the word out about your research can be challenging, and we want to help set you up for success. Many institutions and organizations employ Public Information Officers (PIO) or communications professionals who tell the world what's going on at their institution. If you'd like us to share your Video Byte with a PIO at your institution, please share their email address with us. Doing so will give us permission to copy them on the final delivery email.

We will be in touch with a draft of your video in about three weeks, at which time you will have an opportunity to provide feedback on the accuracy of the text and the appropriateness of the imagery used.

We look forward to working with you!

Kind regards,
Bhavik
